

Agriculture in sub-Saharan Africa

The Worldwatch Institute has released its annual State of the World report for 2011. This year the report focuses on agriculture in sub-Saharan Africa, and a range of small but groundbreaking projects to raise yields, restore degraded soil and make the most of Africa's most precious resource: water.

Guests

Danielle Nierenberg

Senior researcher at the Worldwatch Institute in Washington.

Brian Halweil

Senior fellow at the Worldwatch Institute in Washington.

Further Information

Worldwatch Institute

Story Researcher and Producer

Stephen Crittenden

Radio National often provides links to external websites to complement program information. While producers have taken care with all selections, we can neither endorse nor take final responsibility for the content of those sites.